

Changing Campus Culture in Ohio, Year One:

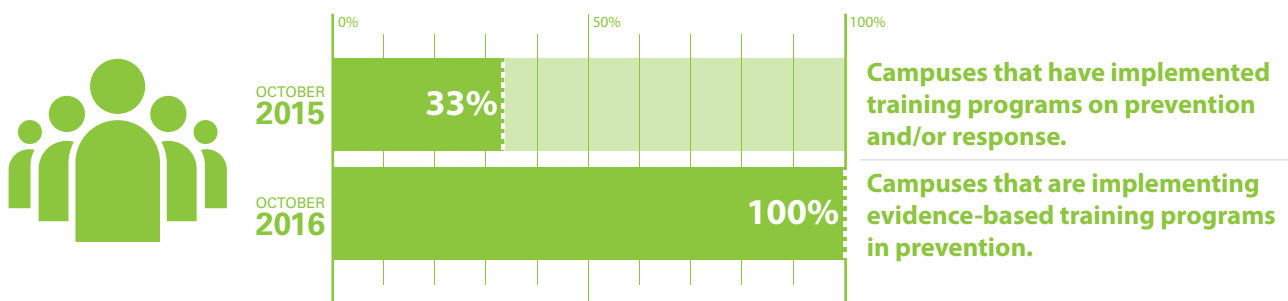

Colleges and universities are stepping up to end sexual violence

With the goal of ending sexual violence at Ohio's colleges and universities, Governor John R. Kasich and the Ohio Legislature allocated $2 million to help colleges and universities implement best practices through the Changing Campus Culture initiative. Changing Campus Culture is one of the most comprehensive approaches to addressing campus sexual violence in the nation. In its first year, 79 out of Ohio's 88 public and private campuses reported making significant progress implementing Changing Campus Culture recommendations to prevent and respond to sexual violence. These campuses continue to demonstrate ongoing commitment to utilizing Changing Campus Culture training and education to prevent and respond to sexual violence in their communities.

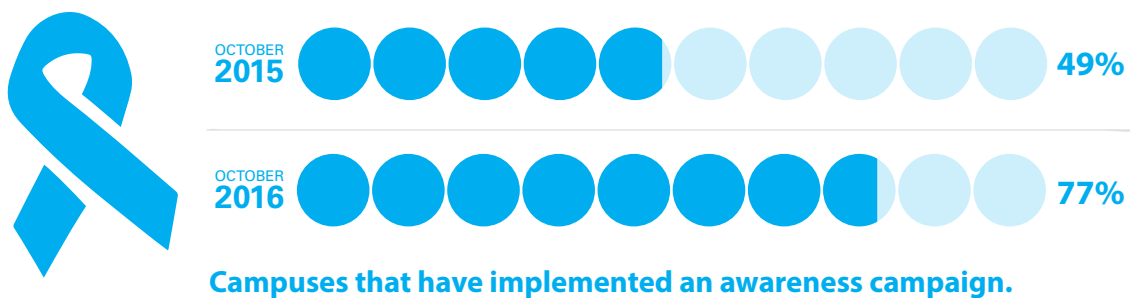

Ohio campuses are collecting data and using it to guide action.

Staff, faculty, campus law enforcement, and students are empowered to prevent sexual violence through evidence-based trainings.

Campuses are implementing awareness campaigns aimed at developing a culture of shared respect and responsibility.

Support services and resources for survivors of sexual violence are expanding on Ohio campuses.
