

Welding has been “under construction” and there have been many inquiries into the status of the CTAG and affiliated CTANs. Here is a brief update:

In April 2018, a survey of the learning outcomes for four welding CTANs was distributed to each state-funded college and university in Ohio. Post-secondary faculty members completing the survey indicated that a “paper and pencil” exam should be required for each CTAN, but another means of assessment was also desired.

A panel has begun work on developing an assessment. Included on the panel will be post-secondary, secondary, and industry professionals.

Once this assessment has been created, the welding alignment endorsement will be surveyed statewide. Following the endorsement of the four welding CTANs, a new welding end-of-course exam, and the in-development assessment are complete, course submissions will resume.
